Gov. Polis recognizes direct care workers, legislative tribute set for April 4

(DENVER, CO.) - In recognition of Colorado's 60,000 direct care workers, Gov. Jared Polis declared April 2 to April 8, 2023 as direct care worker appreciation week. Direct care workers provide care and assistance with activities of daily living to more than 70,000 people who receive long-term services and supports in their homes, host homes, group homes, assisted living residences, and nursing homes.

On April 4 at 9 a.m. Rep. Mary Young and Sen. Joann Ginal will pay tribute in the House and Senate chambers to the state's direct care workforce, recognizing their contributions to Colorado's health care system and celebrating their valuable work.

These dedicated direct care workers have been responsible for providing physical, emotional, and behavioral health services during the extraordinarily challenging COVID-19 pandemic and Colorado's most vulnerable citizens have greatly benefited over the years from the personal commitments that have been made by these exceptional direct care workers.

Colorado Governor Proclamation for April 2-8 as Direct Care Worker Week

In 2022, the State of Colorado made the single largest investment in direct care workers by establishing a base wage of $15 an hour for those taking care of individuals on Medicaid. However, despite this increase, 37 percent of direct care workers in Colorado are at or below 200% of the Federal Poverty Level ($55,000 annually for a family of four). According to PHI, most of Colorado's direct care workers are women and 44 percent identify as non-white.
